

Contributors

Samantha Balaton-Chrimes, Dr Lecturer in International Studies in the School of Humanities and Social Sciences of Deakin University, Australia. She has published widely in the areas of citizenship studies, ethnic politics, democracy and diversity, and corporate accountability. She is currently working on an ARC research project investigating the efficacy and legitimacy of redress avenues available to citizens whose human rights are impacted by transnational business. Sam's geographic expertise is in Kenya, India and Indonesia.

Christopher Decker, Dr Research fellow at the Centre for Socio-Legal Studies, University of Oxford. He is an economist whose research is focussed on the use of economics in public policy, legal and regulatory processes. His core research interests include: regulation (broadly defined to cover the utilities, professional services, financial and environmental regulation); industrial organisation; law and economics, behavioural economics, institutional economics and competition law. He is also interested in the law and economics of development.

Alexander Ebner, Professor, Dr Professor of Social Economics, especially Economic Sociology and Political Economy, at Goethe-Universität Frankfurt. His main research fields are Entrepreneurship and Innovation, Governance and Public Policy, Regional Development and the History of Economics.

Anne-Maree Farrell, Dr Australian Research Council Future Fellow and Associate Professor in the Faculty of Law of Monash University, Melbourne, Australia. She previously held academic positions at the University of Manchester and Lancaster University. Her research expertise lies generally in health law and policy, with specific interests in law and the human body, health technologies and public health.

Elizabeth Fisher, Dr Professor of Environmental Law at Corpus Christi College and University Lecturer in the Faculty of Law of Oxford University. She researches in the areas of environmental law, risk regulation and administrative law. Much of her work has explored the interrelationship between law, administration and regulatory problems. Her work has an important comparative dimension and she focuses in particular on these issues in the legal cultures of the UK, US, Australia, the EU and the World Trade Organization.

Fiona Haines, Dr Professor of Criminology in the School of Social and Political Sciences of Melbourne University, Australia and Adjunct Professor at RegNet in the College of Asia and Pacific at ANU. She has undertaken extensive research in white collar and corporate crime, globalisation, risk and regulation. She is an internationally recognised expert in the area of regulation and compliance. Professor Haines' most recent published work includes a critical criminological analysis of financial fraud and the nature of money in the journal Theoretical Criminology as well as work, with Tim Connor of Newcastle University, on abuse of human rights by sports shoe factories in Indonesia in the same journal.

Bettina Lange, Dr Associate Professor in Law and Regulation, Centre for Socio-Legal Studies, Oxford University. She has carried out extensive research on the implementation of environmental regulation in the UK and Germany. Her work is informed by social theory and draws on qualitative empirical research, including discourse analysis. Her work has explored the role of emotions in regulatory processes characterised by conflict and contestation. Her most recent project—funded by the Natural Environment Research Council—examines how knowledge practices inform the management of water scarcity in the UK.

Kate Macdonald, Dr Lecturer, School of Social and Political Sciences, University of Melbourne. Before joining Melbourne she completed her DPhil in the Department of International Development at Oxford University (jointly supervised in the Department of Politics and International Relations). Her research focuses on transnational governance and accountability systems, especially in relation to transnational business regulation and accountability in the international development sector. She has conducted research and consultancy work on these topics for a range of Non-government Organisations including Amnesty International, ActionAid Australia, Oxfam Australia and the UK's Corporate Responsibility Coalition, and currently serves on the advisory board of the Jubilee Australia Research Foundation.

Shelley Marshall Senior lecturer in the Department of Business Law and Taxation, Monash University, Australia. She teaches, researches, publishes and supervises in the areas of labour law and development and corporate governance and accountability. Her research covers the geographic areas of Australia, India, Indonesia, Cambodia and Bulgaria. Before joining the department she was a Senior Research Fellow with the Corporate Governance and Workplace Partnerships Project at the Law School of the University of Melbourne. Prior to her academic career, Shelley practiced as a lawyer.

Elen Stokes, Dr City Solicitors Educational Trust Senior Lecturer in Property Law in the Law School of Cardiff University. Elen's research explores the ways in which the law mediates and manages risks and scientific uncertainties, particularly those associated with new technologies. Her recent work looks at the notion that emerging technologies tend to be born into an inherited regulatory environment, becoming subject not only to the scope and content of existing regulations but also to their operational, institutional and behavioural features. Elen is interested in the consequences of applying pre-existing measures to rapidly evolving fields, such as nanotechnology and synthetic biology.

Dania Thomas, Dr Lecturer in Business Law in the Adam Smith Business School and School of Law of University of Glasgow, UK. Her research interests include English contract law, company law, sovereign debt crises and financial law and regulation.